who had drawn $80,000 from the City Treasury on vouchers forgen with the name of Filipo Donarumma. On Saturday Mr. Sampson returned from Europe. He says that he had nothing to do with Andy Garvey. On the contrary, his business in Europe was, if possible, to arrest William E. Gray, the great Wall street torger. Detective Sampson had beyond that Gray was living in London and learned that Gray was living in London, and he was determined to secure him.

On Detective Sampson's arrival in London he visited Sir Thomas Henry, the Chief Magistrate, and Superintendent Williamson and Inspector Bayley, of the police, by whom he was offered every facility. The house in which Gray lived was watched by the officers of the London police carefully, until one night when they were rewarded by seeing a man apwhen they were rewarded by seeing a man apwhen they had a resemblance to Gray.

A copy, teste: MORTON MARYE, Cl'k.

A. & C. E. Stuart, p. q. feb 7-w4w trate, and Superintendent Williamson and In-The officers arrested him, but Gray, (tor it was he), in the coolest manner possible, denied his identity, and said that the man they wanted was James Payson Morgan, who was then in the house, and would be produced by him if the officers would wait. To this proposition the officers consented, and Gray went into the house, and coloring his hair and whiskers, made good his escape by the rear door. The scheme was managed most adroitly, and the best officers of the London force were humbugged by this swindler.

Gray lived in magnificent style in London—kept his Brougham, dined with the Duke of Newcastle and the Baron Rothschild, and surpassed the Prince of Wales in the elegance of his equipage. He was regarded as an American millionaire, and showered his gifts on every side with a lavish hand. He continued his swindling schemes with a boldness far exceeding that with which he met with so much success here, and on one occasion obtained an advance of £5,000 from a banker, on a forged telegram purporting to state that $30,000 had been placed to his credit in this city.

Detective Sampson, after Gray's escape from his house in London, was misled by several re-ports which reached the London officers, and went to Brussels, Vienna and Paris, but was finally satisfied that Gray was in London. concealed, and that further search would be unavailing. He accordingly returned, and will now attempt to bring to justice some of Gray's accomplices, leaving Gray to pursue his course in London unmolested.—N. Y. Sun.
